Refugee Services Update:

Patti Grogan commented that World Refugee Day provides an excellent opportunity to dispel myths and misconceptions people may have with regard to refugees.

First, it is not true that large groups of refugees are crossing the border in to the U.S. illegally. All refugees that come to the U.S. have been vetted and the process takes 18-24 months to be approved for resettlement. Several different federal agencies are involved in the vetting process to ensure security. Second, it is important to understand the context in which the U.S. resettles refugees. More than 140 countries, including the U.S. signed the Refugee Convention of 1951 as a result of the atrocities of World War II. The Convention defines the term “refugee” and describes the responsibilities of nations towards those displaced by war and persecution; one of the most important is that nations cannot deport refugees who are in danger. Some countries are absorbing most refugees, including Turkey which has more than 2.5 million refugees. The U.S. supports the international effort by accepting a relatively small number of refugees, this year 85,000, to help alleviate the strain that countries like Turkey bear.
